

In the years I have been a Amateur Radio Operator the code requirments kept people who had the incintive to work and and try to be a good operator. Now we have a lot of people who think it is their right to have radio privilege and break the laws pertaining to this subject. When operating in servives like helping with forest fires we find a lot of these people don't work well with others. They don't have the discipline and it takes a lot of work to just work with them. People who had to work harder to get their license and pass code requirements and tough questions valued their license and worked better together. This requirement should be kept tough and as a result have better trained people with this privilege and not have to have as much law enforcement to keep the bands clean. Keep CW as a requirement for any voice communications except maybe two meters and above. Maybe 5 wpm for General and 13 wpm for Extra.
